

Vision Statement

The City of London Freeman's School is an independent co-educational day and boarding school which provides continuity of education for children aged 7 to 18.

The School was founded in Brixton in 1854 by the Corporation of the City of London to provide 'a religious and virtuous education' for the orphaned children of Freeman of the City of London; Christian principles remain at the heart of its ethos, although the School is non-denominational.

In 1926 the School moved to Ashted Park, its present site and now educates approximately 850 girls and boys, from age 7-13 (Junior School) and from age 13-18 (Senior School). Most of these pupils are day pupils, but the School remains firmly committed to the provision of boarding for a number of its pupils.

The City of London Freeman's School is one of three independent schools owned by the City of London Corporation. There are strong links between the schools and both the Corporation and the City Livery Companies.

The School remains committed to the aims of its founders and is able to provide bursary assistance to children, including orphans of Freeman of the City of London, according to need.

The School's aims are:

- to provide an education of the highest quality in which each individual can reach his or her academic potential;
- to provide a 'whole person' education in which the academic, creative, physical, social and spiritual development of each pupils is promoted in a genuinely co-educational environment;
- to foster an atmosphere of self-respect and care for others in which pupils are confident, fulfilled and happy;
- to prepare pupils to identify and fulfil their role in society and to provide an education for life;
- to work in partnership with parents, governors, staff and former pupils to achieve the School's aims.
